Respawn Entertainment and Oculus are taking the PC VR game Medal of Honor: Above and Beyond (2020) and slimming it down to fit on Oculus Quest 2 for launch later this year. Make sure to clear some space on your device. The game’s developers are eager to ensure that the game runs smoothly and efficiently on the Quest 2, even as they prepare for the potential cross-buy feature, which will let players purchase the PC version of the game on Steam and play it on the Quest 2 for free. This move will make it easier for players to enjoy the game across multiple platforms, and it showcases the continued growth of the VR gaming market.

For Developers

When developing for the Oculus Quest platform, developers must consider the hardware limitations of the device. The Quest 2 has a significantly lower processing power and memory compared to high-end PCs. This means that developers need to optimize their games for the Quest’s hardware, which can be a challenge. However, it also opens up new possibilities for developers to create unique and engaging VR experiences that are specifically tailored to the platform.

For Players

Players who are excited about the quest for more VR games on the Quest platform should keep an eye on the cross-buy feature. This will allow them to purchase the PC version of a game and play it on the Quest for free. This is a great way for players to try out new games and experiences that they might not have otherwise had access to, and it also benefits the developers by increasing the potential audience for their games.

In conclusion, the decision to slim down the PC VR game Medal of Honor: Above and Beyond to fit on the Oculus Quest 2 is a smart move for developers and a welcome addition for players. It showcases the continued growth of the VR gaming market and opens up new possibilities for developers to create unique and engaging VR experiences.
